

ST KILDA ROAD UPDATE
JANUARY 2023

Changes today, better transport tomorrow

Work is underway for the future of St Kilda Road, with major changes to the way you travel.

The Anzac Station tram stop recently opened to passengers

New Anzac Station tram stop opens on St Kilda Road

We've reached another major milestone in our work to improve safety and accessibility for the 300,000 people who travel on St Kilda Road every day, with the opening of the new Anzac Station tram stop.

The new interchange above the Metro Tunnel opened in mid-December after a three week blitz to realign the tram line and rebuild the roadway.

It's the first piece of the Metro Tunnel to open, with Anzac Station under construction below. When the station opens in 2025, it will provide a platform-to-platform connection for public transport users. In the meantime, keep an eye out for signage on how to safely navigate the area while we continue building Anzac Station underneath.

We've also finished building new kerb separated bike lanes between Linlithgow Avenue and Dorcas Street, with our attention now turning to building the new bike lanes between Toorak Road and Union Street.

Work on these bike lanes is due to be complete in late 2023, while construction between Union Street and St Kilda Junction will begin in early 2023.

St Kilda Road is one of Victoria's busiest transport corridors for people travelling to and from the CBD, which is why we're making these changes to improve safety and keep cyclists, drivers and public transport users separate and safe.

Early 2023

Work begins on bike lanes between Union Street and St Kilda Junction

Late 2023
